Anti-Shah demonstration at Shahyad Tower, December 10, 1978, in Tehran, Iran

Course Description:

This course examines the development of Islamic political movements and intellectual thought in the Middle East from the late eighteenth century through the present. A number of contemporary commentators view the rise of Islamic political movements as a recent development, which appeared only in the 1970s coincident with the Iranian Revolution. This course takes a longer view. The first third of the semester considers the growth of Islamic political movements within the Ottoman Empire, as well as responses to European domination of the Middle East from the mid-nineteenth until the end of the Ottoman Empire in 1923. The second part of the course traces the consequences of the abolition of the Ottoman Caliphate and the struggle between Islamic social movements and post-imperial secularizing states in the Middle East. Finally, the class considers the influence of the Iranian Revolution and Cold War violence on Islamic movements from the 1970s-the present. We will examine texts produced by Muslim intellectuals, state officials and various religious groups throughout the region and will consider the role they ascribed to religion in political life. Subjects covered include: Islamic revivalism, institutional and political reform, the Caliphate as an Islamic institution, religion in political and social life, as well as secularism, Salafism and violence.

Student Learning Outcomes:

At the conclusion of this course, students will be able to:

- Understand and distinguish various trends in Islamic intellectual thought as well as political and social movements for the modern period
- Demonstrate knowledge of key debates among Muslim intellectuals and political groups in the Middle East regarding historical processes such as imperialism, nationalism, decolonization, and globalization
- In both written and oral work, practice building historical arguments from primary sources and analyzing the historical arguments made by other scholars

Attendance and Participation: Attendance is mandatory. Late students will be marked absent. All students are expected to have completed the week’s readings prior to each lecture. If you are unable to attend a discussion section, send me an email before class. Three or more unexcused absences will result in automatic failure.

Additional Issues: The use of cell phones, especially text messaging, is strictly prohibited. If you are found to be text messaging during class you will be asked to leave the classroom for the remainder of the day and marked absent. I prefer that students take notes by hand, if you require the use of a computer please see me.

Academic Honesty: Students are required to abide by the University’s Honor Code. Plagiarism or cheating will result in the automatic failure of the course. The code can be found here:
